"AND JUST AS THE LAST OF THEM DIED, QUETZAL APPEARED! HE IS THE AZTEC GOD OF JUSTICE, SEÑOR! AND TO THESE EVIL MEN HE BROUGHT A STRANGE AND TERRIBLE PUNISHMENT!"

EVIL ONES, YOU HAVE PROFANED MY CITY! ETERNAL PUNISHMENT SHALL BE YOURS! EVEN IN DEATH YOU SHALL NOT REST! FOREVER SHALL YOU ROAM IN LIVING DEATH--SUFFERING THE TORTURES OF THE DAMNED!

WELL! QUITE A STORY, RAMON!

BOB MARTIN WAS A SCIENTIST! HOW COULD HE BE FRIGHTENED BY THE TALE OF SUPERSTITIOUS NATIVES? AND MARTIN'S TWO ASSISTANTS, WITH THEIR GREED AND THEIR BLACK THOUGHTS OF MURDER...

THAT KIND OF STUFF DOESN'T SCARE ME, RAMON! HA-HA!

THE BOSS IS GOIN' THERE!

TERROR OF THE SKELETON MEN

I am an old woman now, but still the nightmare comes. Still, on the terrible wings of evil dreams, I am transported far below the surface of the earth to a land where night-time, midnight things that blinding through the tunnels built by an army of dead men, who-but I got ahead of my story....

My name was Miss Cummings. I was one of the first women allowed by London University to take a Doctor's degree in archaeology. In order to collect enough data to write a valuable doctoral thesis I needed to Africa, to do research among the fabulous old ruins of the ancient Pharaohs. It was while I pursued around the border of a dusty marketplace which held the remains of a ruler who had been dead three thousand years that I happened, I was trying to decipher the hieroglyphics inscribed on some masonry few inches missing the wall. Then I set it on a stone ledge and returned to my calculations.

The first indication I had of anything wrong was the odor. The smell was sickeningly sweet. It crept over me and made my limbs feel heavy and weak. It was like some evil incense. I tried to fight off the feeling of drowsy lethargy which was slipping over me. Doubt I realized that the sweet smell that arose from the burning blood in the lamp was causing my sleepiness. Then, just before I slipped into the peaceful gypsons of unconsciousness, I saw it happen. A section of the stone wall of the marketplace swung away, disclosing a series of stone steps which seemed to drop straight downward to I know not where. And from up those steps came clanking a rattled, rattled, skull-faced mob of dead men!

City of the Living Dead. I was in a huge chamber which was guarded by living skeletons of the same kind as those which had taken me prisoner on the earth's surface. But there were human beings there, too, prisoners like me. I found that a young man nearby was gazing at me with pity. He introduced himself as Allen Clark, an English big game hunter who the skeleton men had seized in the wide fastness of the African jungle. Allen was a great comfort to me in the trying days that followed. His steadiness and courage helped me to keep my sanity in the face of the horrors that were about to come.

The skeleton men began by explaining that we were to be charged by a painful process which would make us just like them in mind and body. They took us on an inspection tour of their city, and what we saw made our flesh crawl with disgust and our blood run icy cold in our veins. For they were running a factory of evil, and the product that they were manufacturing was living dead men! We saw the horrible process in all of its awful stages, and we were told the story of the dream of the Living Dead to explain the surface of the earth and how every human body is immortal dead. "What can we do to stop them, Allen?" I whispered.

He was strong and full of courage, but I felt him shudder, too. "I don't know," he said. "But you can pray!"

As if I hadn't been praying right along!

The skeleton men were efficient. They used every hour while we were waiting our turn to be transformed into Living Dead. We were all assigned tasks. Allen and I were taken to a room where long rows of men and women had been strung from the ceiling by long ropes tied to their wrists. They were horrible to look at. Their hair had turned color; their fingernails had grown until their hands were stiffening and their flesh had wasted away until they were almost like the skeleton men in appearance.

These were the "lucky" victims chosen by the Living Dead to be given the gift of immortal life! I felt like, if this was what I'd look like when they finished with me, anything was better than slinking down to make a coward's end!

Allen and I were given whips and were permitted to beat the convicts if they refused to work. I looked at Allen in amazement when I empty chamber. The light in the crypt was weak. The eye fell upon an odd oil lamp. It was a primitive thing, but I saw to my amazement that there was fuel in it, evidently placed there by one of my native assistants. I struck a match and touched the flickering flame to the wick of the lamp. It flared without trouble, but it smoked a lot, and I wanted a

I had fainted as the skeleton-man had approached me, and when I awoke I found myself a prisoner in one of the caverns which made up the mountain.

"They're insane!" I whispered to Allan.

He nodded grimly. "Yes," he said. "Yes, they're insane. But they can carry out their plan, unless something happens to stop them before too long!"

I thought of a world controlled by the creatures who stood before me, and I shuddered that, even if men were alone, Allan told me what was probably the reason for our peculiar jobs.

"Living underground as they do," he explained, "they're so dumb-witted that any food source will cause variations great enough to make cavemen and land-olives."

But I was too disheartened to
